1 Natural Beauty
Cumberland River scenes are nothing short of breathtaking in the fall. The RiverWalk meanders along the river's curves and bends and connects directly to downtown via the Upland Trail.

2 African American Legacy Trail
Follow this 19-point walking and driving trail to historic sites such as the Mount Olive Cemetery and the Port Royal Benevolent Society. Learn about Olympic Gold Medalist Wilma Rudolph and others who contributed significantly to the city's and nation's history.

3 Mountain Biking
Find your cycling thrill along one of Clarksville's designed mountain biking trails. Rotary Park and North Ford Mountain Bike Trail offer exhilarating hills, jumps and tight switchbacks.

This rural pioneer settlement is spread over 40 expansive acres. The 16 log structures are filled with authentic furnishings from 1840-1890. Open weekends through October, tours are self-guided. Random benches and picnic tables invite you to relax and appreciate the timeless surroundings.

5 Rural Scenic Drives
Tennessee's fifth-largest city still offers plenty of rural highways and country back roads. Fields are being harvested and tobacco barns can still be found firing the crop that made Clarksville one of the wealthiest cities in the nation in the mid-19th century.

6 Fall Brews
Clarksville's 35-year-old winery, 7 craft breweries, distillery, and meadery will all unveil new seasonal offerings in time for fall. Tennessee Valley Brewing's fall favorite Bastogne Brown is a pecan nutbrown with a hint of vanilla, and King's Bluff Brewery's Clarktoberfest is the pinnacle of their fall festivities.

7 Trails & Hikes
Soak up the splendor of fall color along the nine-mile Clarksville Greenway. The paved trail is ideal for walking, running, biking (bring your equipment or rent on site), or skating. Dunbar Cave State Park's 144 acres include hiking trails, wildlife, and a fascinating visitor center. Dogs are welcome too, just make sure to keep them on a leash.

8 Family Fun
The Customs House Museum, City Forum, DEFY Air Trampoline Park and Downtown Commons will help make memories to last a lifetime.
